ARTICLES

Alderson, Wroe. Administered Prices and Retail Grocery Advertising. No. 1, pp. 2-6
A supermarket chain sets prices not according to classic economic theories but to minimize its cost of appearing competitive to the consumer.

Axelrod, Joel N. Induced Moods and Attitudes toward Products. No. 2, pp. 19-24
Mood changes after movie viewing predicted the direction of changes in attitudes toward consumer products.

Banks, Seymour. On Methods: Marketing Experiments. No. 1, pp. 34-41
A sale results from many causes. To learn the contribution of just one of them—say advertising—we are obliged to design experiments.

Bauer, Raymond A. The Initiative of the Audience. No. 2, pp. 2-7
We don't just receive messages—we choose among them, evaluate their senders, and, if we can, talk back.

Becknell, James C., Jr., and Robert W. McIsaac.
Test Marketing Cookware Coated with "Teflon". No. 3, pp. 2-8
Du Pont TV commercials expanded the total cookware market 21 per cent, and doubled purchases of the type advertised.

Belson, William A. On Methods: Group Testing in Market Research. No. 2, pp. 39-43
An inexpensive, quick way to supplement market research data obtained by interviews.

Bower, John. Net Audiences of U.S. and Canadian Magazines: Seven Tests of Agostini's Formula. No. 1, pp. 13-20
In 1961 a new estimation procedure promised to end laborious tabulations of unduplicated audiences. Bower finds it works—up to a point.

Caffyn, J. M., and M. Sagovsky. Net Audiences of British Newspapers: A Comparison of the Agostini and Sainsbury Methods. No. 1, pp. 21-25
A technique originated 25 years ago gives accurate estimates when duplicated audience is high.

Corey, Lawrence G., and Richard M. Doub. Awareness of Radio Commercials. No. 3, pp. 17-20
Listeners claimed to recognize both real and bogus commercials but did not necessarily use the products advertised. The authors propose a "principle of distortion" as a basis for a new system of measurement.

Davenport, John Scott. See Smith, Parker, and Davenport (No. 2); see also Parker, Smith, and Davenport (No. 4).

Doub, Richard M. See Corey and Doub.

Eindhoven, Jan. See Kamen and Eindhoven.

Ferber, Robert, and Hugh G. Wales. A New Way to Measure Journal Readership. No. 3, pp. 9-16
Readers were asked to fill out forms attached directly to journal articles and advertisements.

Garfinkle, Norton. See Greenberg and Garfinkle.

Garfinkle, Norton. A Marketing Approach to Media Selection. No. 4, pp. 7-15
Now you can know which vehicles reach how many of your present and prospective customers.

Glock, Charles Y., and Francesco M. Nicosia.
Sociology and the Study of Consumers. No. 3, pp. 21-27
The authors review the approaches of Lazarsfeld, Katona, and clinical psychologists.

Greenberg, Allan. On Methods: Paired Comparisons vs. Monadic Tests. No. 4, pp. 44-47
Respondents rated two brands twice: once by a paired comparison and once by rating each brand separately. Overall ratings remained the same, but many persons switched preferences.

Glock, Charles Y., and Francesco M. Nicosia.
Sociology and the Study of Consumers. No. 3, pp. 21-27
The authors review the approaches of Lazarsfeld, Katona, and clinical psychologists.

Greenberg, Allan. On Methods: Paired Comparisons vs. Monadic Tests. No. 4, pp. 44-47
Respondents rated two brands twice: once by a paired comparison and once by rating each brand separately. Overall ratings remained the same, but many persons switched preferences.

Greenberg, Allan, and Norton Garfinkle. Visual Material and Recall of Magazine Articles. No. 2, pp. 30-34
Lots of pictures help the reader remember the article in which they appear.

Hoofnagle, William S. The Effectiveness of Advertising for Farm Products. No. 4, pp. 2-6
While Madison Avenue claims it can't be done, Washington's agricultural economists regularly measure the sales effects of advertising. Their secret: controlled experiments.

Howard, Ronald A. On Methods: Stochastic Process Models of Consumer Behavior. No. 3, pp. 35-42
The Markov chain model does not really describe purchase behavior. Professor Howard shows how to get rid of its most obvious failings.

Kamen, Joseph M., and Jan Eindhoven. Instructions Affecting Food Preferences. No. 2, pp. 35-38
The more a person was told about the purpose of unfamiliar foods, the more he tended to rate them alike.

Keane, John G. Low Cost, High Return Mail Surveys. No. 3, pp. 28-30
About 80 per cent of an established panel consistently responded to a double-fold post card.

Kuhn, Walther. Net Audiences of German Magazines: A New Formula. No. 1, pp. 30-33
Herr Kuhn finds that the equation one should use to estimate the net audience of a combination of vehicles depends on the number of vehicles.

McIsaac, Robert W. See Becknell and McIsaac.

Marc, Marcel. Net Audiences of French Business Papers: Agostini's Formula Applied to Special Markets. No. 1, pp. 26-29
Monsieur Marc extends his colleague's method to the specialized audiences of French business papers.

Nicosia, Francesco M. See Glock and Nicosia.

Orr, Earle W., Jr. See Schaffir and Orr.

Parker, Edwin B. See Smith, Parker, and Davenport.

Parker, Edwin B., Stewart A. Smith, and John Scott Davenport. Advertising Theory and Measures of Perception. No. 4, pp. 40-43
The authors contend that the recognition method, though better than recall, is hardly an ideal measure of perception. To partial out false recognition, they suggest using control ads rather than nonexposed control groups.

Robinson, Edward J. How an Advertisement's Size Affects Responses to It. No. 4, pp. 16-24
Size of ad had little effect, but filmed eye movements showed that each individual has a way of scanning ads so distinctive as to be his own "visual fingerprint."

Sagovsky, M. See Caffyn and Sagovsky.

Schaffir, Kurt H., and Earle W. Orr, Jr. The Determination of Advertising Budgets for Brands. No. 1, pp. 7-11
There are better ways than taking a fixed per cent of last year's sales.

Schyberger, Bo W:son. The Accumulative and Repeat Audiences of Swedish Weekly Magazines. No. 4, pp. 25-33
U. S. media men who feel well nourished by the present outpouring of survey data should note the findings of Schyberger's planted respondents—and his 88 per cent response rate.

Smith, Stewart A. See Parker, Smith, and Davenport.

Smith, Stewart A., Edwin B. Parker, and John Scott Davenport. Advertisement Readership and Buying Plans. No. 2, pp. 25-29
The authors find little relation between ad readership and disposition to purchase the advertised product.

Stephenson, William. Public Images of Public Utilities. No. 4, pp. 34-39
To plumb underlying feelings quantitatively, the Q-sort technique and factor analysis were used to measure attitudes toward public utilities.

Wales, Hugh G. See Ferber and Wales.

Wells, William D. How Chronic Overclaimers Distort Survey Findings. No. 2, pp. 8-18
Professor Wells shows how yeasaying is related to other behavior of interest to advertisers.

Ziff, Ruth. How to Locate Purchasers of a Product. No. 3, pp. 32-34
Simply offer them a premium for returning a card attached to the package.
